2.3 Teaching- Learning Process

2.3.1 Student centric methods, such as experiential learning, participative learning and problem solving methodologies are used for enhancing learning experiences using ICT tools.

Response:

As experimental and participative learning increases the overall understanding of the subject and its application. Institute focuses and encourages the same during the process of teaching and learning instead of following traditional teaching methods.

In order to improve knowledge, skill and build confidence among the students as well as to acquire required soft skill knowledge required for industry in order to make them eligible for job, entrepreneurship development, the teaching-learning process is made effective and efficient by our institute through Experiential learning, participative learning and problem solving methodologies.

Experiential Learning:

- In the experiential learning process, the students are actively engaged in performing the experiments in laboratory as well as on field, clearing their doubts by asking questions, investigating the same and being curious in solving problems. Students are then able to apply the learned theory to its practical applications to solve the various engineering problems.
- Our Institution established industry powered centers to train the students on emerging technologies by signing MOU's with industry which helps our second year students to do their four to six weeks internship by working on field and final years students complete their projects by performing experiments in various industries. Industry expert share their knowledge and experience and guide for completion of projects.
- Experiential learning through theory to practical's make the students to aware how theoretical laws and principles are applied applied practically to solve the various engineering problems.
